

KazNU is my university

Al-Farabi Kazakh National University, or KazNU, occupies an important place in the higher education system of Kazakhstan and Central Asia. It was founded in 1933 in the city of Alma-Ata and received its name in honor of the great Kazakh philosopher al-Farabi. The university offers a variety of educational programs in various fields of knowledge, including natural sciences and humanities, engineering technology and medicine. KazNU is a leading scientific center that actively conducts research in various areas, including ecology, biomedicine and information technology. The university has an extensive infrastructure, including modern scientific laboratories, libraries and academic buildings. KazNU also actively cooperates with international universities and organizations, exchanging students and scientists, as well as participating in international scientific projects. Thanks to its high level of education and scientific activities, the Kazakh National University attracts talented students and scientists from all over the world, playing an important role in the development of education and science in the region.
